

Peter McDermott

Press Quotes

"Its impulsive, and not the smartest idea, to call an album's success over the first two singles but I'll admit that what he's done so far... His eye towards the challenges of the music life and the difficulties awaiting him fills me with the hope that McDermott will be here next week and next year as well. There's so much more coming for a music fan, one with an ear for pop and color, and youth tempered with a small smidgen of wisdom. A music lover looking for some local flavor to a new year of music."

Earl Maldoun, "Being the Lead in Your Own Movie", Shutter 16 Magazine

"Above all, this album does an amazing job of bringing you straight to the setting that New York-native Peter McDermott wants to take you. "Drinking Song" brings you right into a dive bar amid heartache, full of xylophone hits and harmonica-backed gang vocals while songs like "Life of the Party" puts you in the shoes of a person realizing that their current situation, while probably not the greatest, isn't gonna slow them down from a weekend of binge drinking. Overall, One Big Picture Show is a fun record without sacrificing its blatant honesty. It takes you back to a simpler era in music while reminding you of the down-to-earth attitude that has become increasingly popular in the recent years. Legitimately every song would be a perfect fit on any indie movie soundtrack, and we absolutely love that."

Trevor Nicholson, "Album Review - One Big Picture Show", Forgotten Underground

"As a whole, One Big Picture Show crosses over multiple genre lines without ever feeling strange... McDermott certainly knows his way around a pop song, and there's plenty in these six songs to prove that, whether it be the all-too-brief bridge in "Who's Gonna Love You?" which gets so close to prog it's actually impressive, or the undeniably sunny guitar lead in album closer "The Cure That I Need." It's a great first glimpse into an artist setting himself up to be the life of the party."

TJ Foster, "One Big Picture Show - EP Review", Digital Wheat Paste
